The undergraduate days of the Class of 1963 are coming to an end. They take with them many happy memories of four years of study and achievement. But Old Dominion goes on. The six thousand students who attend classes at the college are affected greatly by the responsibilities, friendships, and honors that go along with college attendance. The enthusiastic spirit of Old Dominion is a part of the mold of the individual careers of all its students.
SENIOR CLASS

The four years pass quickly for most. They strengthen the envisioned goals of some and reveal broader fields of potential for many others. It’s a period of growth and development for students, sometimes abrupt and harsh, usually measured and gentle.

But looking aside from the changes tangible and intangible wrought in all students, the campus, too, grows and matures. Slowly it encompasses the surrounding blocks, always retaining the basic features which make it Alma Mater and a familiar place to all homecomers.

1963 graduates have seen the coming of many buildings and changes in policies and procedures around Old Dominion. Four years ago our seniors entered Norfolk Division of William and Mary. They have since attended Norfolk College of William and Mary, Norfolk College, and now Old Dominion College. This is the last class to graduate that has attended the college under its four names. The class has witnessed the addition of three new buildings, the Hughes Library, the Fine Arts Building, and the Physics and Business Administration Building.

Senior Class Officers are (Seated, 1 to r) Nadine Isaacs, Secretary, and Sandra LoCascio, President. Standing are Camille Francis, Treasurer, and Linda Davis, Vice-President.

The four years have seen the usual campus shake-ups, flares of emotions, displays of unity and disunity typical of any college scene. The seniors of 1963 take these memories with them and go to a world waiting for fresh talent, leaving behind them the never-ending stream of next year’s seniors.

A big moment in the life of every senior is when he tries on his cap and gown for the first time.

The student editors worked toward fuller coverage of campus activities.
