

Green Humanities, vol. 3 (2021), pp. 91-93
www.greenhumanities.org
© 2021

Photographs
by Talor Stone

The icefiord at the outlet of the Jakobshavn glacier where icebergs can tower over 300ft out of the water. —TS

Typical housing in the village of Sisimiut guarded by a sled dog. This type of housing was introduced by Danish colonizers and has replaced traditional Inuit huts in nearly all of Greenland. They are interesting representations of globalization—formed with wood in a land with no trees and adorned with antennas to connect the most far-flung places with the modern world. —TS

Zion's church in Ilulissat was built in 1779 and was the largest structure in Greenland at the time. It remains a symbol of colonization and cultural evangelism. —TS