ABOUT THE CONDUCTORS

Paul S. Kim is a conductor, violinist, composer, and educator who works to blend classical artistry with popular accessibility. As assistant professor of music at Old Dominion University, he directs the ODU Symphony Orchestra, teaches, applied violin and conducting, and oversees the Department of Music’s string and chamber music programs. He also serves as assistant conductor of the Richmond Philharmonic Orchestra. Previously, he has served as assistant conductor and principal second violinist of the Piedmont Symphony Orchestra, Waynesboro Symphony Orchestra, and the Charlottesville & University Symphony Orchestra. On the popular side, Dr. Kim was the conductor for the Eurythmics star Dave Stewart and his Rock Fabulous Orchestra, conducting songs Stewart wrote for Eurythmics, Bono, Gwen Stefani, Tom Petty, Mick Jagger, and others.

As an educator, Dr. Kim served for three years as director of strings at Woodberry Forest School. He also served as principal conductor of the McLean Youth Orchestra and was the founding director of the Crossroads Youth Orchestra in Culpeper, Virginia. As a violinist, he is a current member of the Roanoke Symphony as well as a previous member of the Fairfax Symphony Orchestra and the McLean Orchestra. Dr. Kim is also the composer of over twenty original works for small and large ensembles. His arrangements of Radiohead songs for string quintet SYBARITE5 have been performed on NPR’s Performance Today as well as at such venues as Carnegie Hall, Lincoln Center, and Aspen Music Festival; one such cover helped earn SYBARITE5 a top-ten rating in Billboard’s Classical Crossover Albums chart in 2011. The arrangements have been released on SYBARITE5’s album Everything in Its Right Place.

Dr. Kim completed a D.M.A. in conducting performance at Shenandoah Conservatory under the mentorship of Jan Wagner. Previously, he earned an M.M. in orchestral conducting at the University of Maryland as well as an M.E. in music and a B.S. in chemistry at the University of Virginia. He also formerly served as a sergeant in the U.S. Marine Corps Reserve.

Nicholas Daniels is the conductor of six 5th-grade strings classes for Norfolk Public Schools—a position he has had since 2013. Mr. Daniels holds a B.M. degree in music education from Old Dominion University. He studied saxophone with James Nesbit and Dennis Zeisler and has performed with the Virginia Symphony Orchestra Chorus and several local churches.

Before coming to Norfolk, Mr. Daniels was the Music Director for Stonebridge School in Chesapeake, where he taught for three years. He was in charge of the 6th-12th-grade choruses and the 6th-grade strings and band classes. Mr. Daniels is also a member of the National Association for Music Education.

PROGRAM NOTES

Today’s program, “Romantic Symphonists,” presents works by four composers of the Romantic period. The term “romantic” does not refer to romance between individuals but to the musical style prevalent during the 19th century. Among its most common elements are a preference for a bigger, heavier, and richer sound than before; a tendency towards more dramatic expression of individual emotions; the growing influence of national styles and folk music (as opposed to the more international style of the 18th century); and a focus on nature. There was also more individuality than in the fashion-driven 18th century, so Romantic composers exhibited different combinations of these elements in different ways.

German composer Johannes Brahms composed in the late Romantic era, and the Academic Festival Overture calls for the large orchestra and full sound that was characteristic of that time. However, Brahms’s music also looked back in many ways, especially in his use of musical form.

Brahms came from a poor background. He studied music intensively at home but never went to a university. Many years later, however, he had become famous enough as a composer for Breslau University to award him an honorary degree. The Academic Festival Overture was first performed for the occasion, in 1881. The spirit of the piece came as quite a surprise to the faculty, who had expected a solemn piece for a solemn occasion; indeed, many believe that Brahms was deliberately playing a joke on the professors.

The piece makes use of at least five preexisting popular pieces, including four traditional German student songs. At the beginning, and recurring throughout the overture, is the Rákóczi March. Next, introduced by brass and woodwinds, comes “We Have Built a Stately House.” “The Land Father,” a patriotic song, is introduced by the strings. “What Comes from Afar” tells the story of a clownish yokel who comes to a university. The bassoons, often called the “clowns of the orchestra,” introduce the theme, to low string accompaniment. The piece concludes with “Gaudeamus igitur,” a student drinking song, played with all the solemnity that any professor could hope for.

The aria “Bella siccome un angelo” comes from the comic opera Don Pasquale by Gaetano Donizetti. To listen to the lyrics (“Beautiful as an angel, ...fresh as a lily”) it may sound as though this aria is indeed romantic in the
The great Czech (formerly Bohemian) composer Antonín Dvořák was born a Slavic peasant under the Austro-Hungarian empire, and as such, he was forced to fight an uphill battle to become a successful composer despite his background. He was a devout nationalist who used the folk music of his native region as a primary source of inspiration.

Dvořák’s Symphony No. 8 in G Major borrows much from his native Bohemian musical origins, but also prominent in this symphony are the sounds of nature. The music could be described as unusually cheerful for the late Romantic era. The main theme of the first movement, introduced by a solo flute, is meant to sound like birdsong. The second movement depicts a summer day in the countryside, periodically interrupted by gusts of wind, and climaxing with a thunderstorm. The dance-like third movement begins with a graceful, waltz-like theme, followed by a more energetic section. The first theme returns but is followed this time by an explosive coda. The fourth movement uses the full forces of a late Romantic orchestra to bring the symphony to a grand finale.

ABOUT THE ARTISTS

Sarah Bass is currently a junior at Old Dominion University pursuing a bachelor's degree in Music Education. She has been studying clarinet with Dennis Zeisler since her junior year in high school. Sarah has performed with the ODU wind ensemble, the ODU New Music Ensemble, and the Virginia Wind Symphony. Along with performing, Sarah pursues her love for teaching by teaching clarinet and piano privately, teaching group beginning piano classes, and serving as the color guard instructor at Nansemond-Suffolk Academy. She hopes to teach band in a middle or high school locally upon graduation, and she later plans to pursue a master's degree in music education.

Bret Thom is a vocal performance major in his junior year at Old Dominion University. Bret has been singing and performing since the age of four, but he only recently began studying opera upon studying at ODU. Bret has performed in several ODU productions, including Guys and Dolls (Sky Masterson) and The Marriage of Figaro (Figaro). Upon graduating from ODU, Bret plans on continuing his studies at the graduate level and hopes one day to perform professionally in New York and Chicago.
